The “Fair Enough” Close

_____, I would like you to take out a piece of paper and a pen to take some notes. Now before we do that, I would like to cover something right up front. In front of you is a blank sheet of paper, there is nothing on it, which means there is nothing to understand or misunderstand. I am going to cover the ins and outs of our program along with the directions we take our students in detail. However, _____, I would like to make you a promise.

I’m going to keep the explanation of the program just as simple and clear as that blank sheet of paper in front of you. If I fail to do so, I will understand if you are reluctant to make a decision concerning the program. And vice versa, if I can explain the nuts and bolts and you can see the value and at that point you are unable to make a decision, I will be reluctant to extend an invitation to you at all. For this reason, I promise you that when I finish explaining the program, it will be just as clear and simple as the blank sheet of paper. At that point, I’m going to ask you to make a decision. If you see that it is in your best interest to say yes, I am going to ask you to say yes. If however, I don’t feel this program will help you accomplish the goals and dreams you have set for yourself then we will, at that point, part as friends. Is that fair enough _____? Great!

The Quality Close

Mr. /Mrs. _____A.D. Kessler/L2ST decided years ago that it would be easier to explain price one time than to apologize for poor quality or poor service forever {pause}—and I’ll bet you are glad he made that decision then, aren’t you?

The Price Is Too High Close

_____, or company had to make a choice between building our product as cheaply as possible and offering it as a get-by product, or building quality into the product for service, durability, and your long lasting enjoyment. In short, for long-range value and benefit. With this decision facing us, we tried to put ourselves in your shoes. We felt you would prefer to deal with a company that puts everything possible into its product to make the best and most useful, rather than a company that uses cheap materials and cheap labor to turn out a get-by product. Most people, _____, and I’ll bet that includes you, clearly understand that good things are not cheap and cheap things are seldom good. You want something you can depend on for good service over the long haul don’t you, _____?

The Empathy Close

Tell me, _____, in addition to those things, would there be any other reason you could not go ahead and make the commitment to secure your financial future, and the future of your family, by getting started, working with a coach, in Creative Real Estate today?

Then whatever the objection they have given you, you need to feed exactly that objection back to them.

*I don't care what you sell, the odds are at least ten to one that the prospect's reason for not buying can be used as the reason he should buy.

How much does this cost?

This program doesn't cost anything if you qualify. The reason is we show you how to make it pay for itself and keep on paying. For the people who don't qualify, it costs them the rest of their lives. They never get the opportunity to gain the knowledge to take control of their financial future. Yes _____, there is tuition, but right now I don't even know what your goals are, or what you want to accomplish. Let me tell you, this is not a cookie cutter program. We tailor fit the program to your needs and wants. So once we understand that, my Senior Director would go over tuition and how the program will work. So if that was something you qualified for and we could show you how to do it, would you be open to it?

PRICE/COST

*That is a good question. Write that down. I don't know the answer, but if you qualify my director (who is an expert) can answer that.

*There would be tuition upfront. But we want to show you how to take care of it without taking any money out of your pocket.

*I don't know. But until I can ask you a few questions, I'm not sure if I can help you.

*If it's not exactly right for you there is no charge. You're not going to invest in something unless it's exactly right for you, correct?

*Is price your only concern? How much would you be willing to pay?

*If it was free would you invest? Why?

*Are you going to invest only if the price is right?

*We want to show you how to create a whole new career and how the business will more than pay for itself.

Take Aways

*If all you're concerned about is the cost, this may not be for you.

*You must see and understand the value before the director will even consider inviting you aboard
